Biography

Rachel Palmén is a postdoctoral researcher in the Gender and ICT programme at the Internet Interdisciplinary Institute. She is currently leading a project ‘The shaping of women’s ICT career trajectories: Dynamics within and beyond employment and the public policy response’ funded by the Ministry of Equality, Spain and is involved in other projects related to Gender and ICT. She completed her doctoral research in 2007 at the Centre for Social and Economic Research at Sheffield Hallam University which looked at community involvement in decision making at the neighbourhood level. She has published various book chapters and articles in a wide range of social science journals. Her main research interests include community participation, public policy and the under-representation of women in ICT professions. She is interested in cross-national research and works mainly with qualitative data.